Welcome to
EDWARDS Air Force Base

AND THE
AIR FORCE FLIGHT TEST CENTER

*Welcome to Edwards Air Force Base and the Air Force Flight Test Center!
Whether you are here for a short visit or being assigned for a tour of duty, I sincerely hope your stay is enjoyable.*

Edwards is where tomorrow's Air Force is tested, and all of us who live and work here are extremely proud of this installation, its rich history and the role it has had in the advancement of military air power and state-of-the-art aviation in general.

From the development of America's first jet aircraft, the Bell XP-59A Airacomet, to our nation's newest air dominance fighter, the F/A-22 Raptor, and soon the F-35 Joint Strike Fighter, Edwards has been home to virtually every aircraft to enter the Air Force inventory since World War II.

Edwards was where the sound barrier was first broken by Capt. Chuck Yeager in the Bell X-1 on Oct. 14, 1947, and where other X-planes pushed that record to two, three, four, five and six times the speed of sound and beyond. It was here that the X-15 probed the threshold of space and where the Space Shuttle first took wing and then landed on its initial return from earth's orbit. Edwards is also home to the Air Force Research Laboratory's Propulsion Directorate, Detachment 7, the U.S. Marine Corps Marine Aircraft Group 46 Detachment Bravo, NASA's Dryden Flight Research Center and considerable test activity conducted by America's commercial aerospace industry.

Our unique combination of geography and climate makes Edwards a true national asset. But the real strength of Edwards is the men and women who work here — their energy, commitment and professionalism. The motto of the Air Force Flight Test Center is "Ad Inexplorata," which translates from the Latin into "Toward the Unexplored." While you're at Edwards, I hope you'll get to know these words and come to understand just exactly what they mean to all who serve here. Again, a hearty welcome and best wishes from all of us for a most enjoyable stay.

HISTORY

THE NATURAL SETTING

A parched and forbidding wilderness to those who first see it, the northwestern Mojave Desert is a land of coyotes and kangaroo rats, of ragged greasewood and, of course, Joshua trees. It is a harsh land of sometimes stunning contrasts — a land of griddle-hot days and bone-chilling nights, of violent dust storms, bewildering mirages and mesmerizing sunsets.

Until the Southern Pacific Railroad arrived in 1876, the desert was populated mostly by occasional prospectors drifting endlessly in pursuit of elusive mineral wealth. In 1882, the Santa Fe Railroad ran a line westward out of Barstow toward Mojave and built a water stop at the edge of an immense dry lakebed, roughly 20 miles southeast of Mojave. The lonely water stop was known simply as “Rod,” and the lakebed was then called Rodriguez Dry Lake.

By the early 1900s, “Rodriguez” had been anglicized into “Rodgers,” which was then shortened to “Rogers.” First formed in the Pleistocene Epoch and featuring an extremely flat, smooth and concrete-like surface, Rogers Dry Lakebed is a playa — or pluvial lake — that spreads out over 44 square miles, making it the largest such geological formation in the world.

Its parched clay and silt surface undergoes a timeless cycle of renewal each year, as water from winter rains is swept back and forth by desert winds, smoothing it out to an almost glass-like flatness.

THE HOMESTEADERS

In 1910, the Corum family settled at the edge of this lakebed. In addition to raising alfalfa and turkeys, they located other homesteaders in the area for a fee of $1 per acre. As those settlers moved in, the Corum brothers earned contracts for drilling water wells and clearing land. They also opened a general store and post office.

Their request to have the post office stop named “Corum” was disallowed because there was already a Coram, Calif. So they simply reversed the spelling of their name and named it “Muroc.” Small, isolated homesteads dotted the land over the next 20 years.

The Corum's tiny one-room general store eventually grew into the Muroc Mercantile Company and Post Office, a landmark at Muroc until 1953.

THE AIRMEN ARRIVE

The early homesteaders thought of Rogers Dry Lakebed as a wasteland. However, a visionary airman commanding March Field, Lt. Col. H.H. “Hap” Arnold, saw it as a one-of-a-kind “natural aerodrome” — one that could be acquired at virtually no cost to the taxpayer.

Thus, in September 1933, the Muroc Bombing and Gunnery Range was established by Arnold. This remote training site, now a small enclave within present-day Edwards, served the Army Air Corps' bombers and fighters for several years.

With the arrival of World War II, a permanent base sprang up for the training of combat flight crews. In July 1942, it was activated as a separate post and designated Muroc Army Air Base.

Throughout the war years, B-24s thundered through the Muroc skies and P-38s strafed the targets on the range as bomber crews and fighter pilots prepared to do battle overseas.

STRANGE SHAPES IN THE SKY

In the meantime, wartime development of military aviation overwhelmed Wright Field in Ohio with an immense volume of flight test work. It was necessary to find a remote location with good flying weather where a new top-secret airplane could safely undergo tests.

In the spring of 1942, a site was chosen alongside the north shore of Rogers Dry Lakebed, about six miles away from the training base at Muroc. A wooden hangar and rudimentary facilities sprang up and on Oct. 1, 1942, Bell test pilot Bob Stanley lifted the wheels of the Bell XP-59A Airacomet off the enormous, flat surface of the dry lakebed. The turbojet revolution had arrived. America's first jet plane was shortly joined by a second, the famed Lockheed XP-80 Shooting Star.

As revolutionary as these two experimental fighter planes were, the natural runways of the lakebed served them well. The first-generation turbojet engines had a nasty habit of flaming out, and the Airacomet required an extremely long takeoff roll.

During the postwar years, all of America's first generation of jets — both Air Force and Navy — underwent testing at Muroc, and the great lakebed served as a welcome haven to countless pilots in distress.

The success of these programs attracted a new type of research activity to the base in late 1946. The rocket-powered Bell X-1 was the first in a long series of experimental airplanes designed to prove or disprove aeronautical concepts — to probe the most challenging unknowns of flight and solve its mysteries.

On Oct. 14, 1947, Capt. Charles E. "Chuck" Yeager flew the small bullet-shaped airplane to become the first human to exceed the speed of sound. With the X-1, flight testing at Muroc began to assume two distinct identities. Highly experimental research programs — such as the X-3, X-4, X-5 and XF-92A — were typically flown in conjunction with the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, or NACA, and were conducted in a methodical fashion to answer largely theoretical questions. Then, as now, the great bulk of flight testing at Muroc focused on evaluations of the capabilities of aircraft and systems proposed for the operational inventory.

In December 1949, Muroc was renamed Edwards Air Force Base in honor of Capt. Glen W. Edwards, who was killed a year earlier in the crash of the YB-49 Flying Wing.

By that time, the base had already become the reigning center of American flight research and on June 25, 1951, this fact was finally officially recognized when its test community was designated the U.S. Air Force Flight Test Center, or AFFTC. That same year, the U.S. Air Force Test Pilot School moved to Edwards from Wright Field, Ohio.

Its curriculum focused on the traditional field of performance testing and the relatively new field of stability and control, which had suddenly assumed critical importance with the dramatic increases in speed offered by the new turbojets.

THE GOLDEN AGE OF FLIGHT TEST

The decade of the 1950s was a remarkable period in the history of aviation, and there was no better evidence of this than what transpired at Edwards. If the concept seemed feasible — or even just desirable — it was evaluated in the skies above the sprawling 301,000-acre base.

The experimental rocket planes, for example, continued to expand the boundaries of the high-speed and stratospheric frontiers.

As the decade opened, the first-generation X-1 reached Mach 1.45 (957 mph) and a 71,902-foot altitude, representing the edge of the envelope. The D-558-II Douglas Skyrocket soon surpassed these marks. In 1951, Douglas test pilot Bill Bridgeman flew it to a top speed of Mach 1.88 (1,180 mph) and a peak altitude of 74,494 feet. Then, in 1953, Marine test pilot Lt. Col. Marion Carl flew the same plane to an altitude of 83,235 feet.

Col. Charles S. Yeager, Commandant of the U.S. Air Force Aerospace Research Pilot School at the Air Force Flight Test Center, Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., poses with a model of the North American X-15 high speed, high-altitude research aircraft. He holds a photograph of the Bell X-1 aircraft in which he became the first man to fly faster than the speed of sound on Oct. 14, 1947.

On Nov. 20, 1951, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics's Scott Crossfield became the first man to reach Mach 2 as he piloted the Skyrocket to a speed of Mach 2.005 (1,291 mph). Less than a month later, Maj. Chuck Yeager topped this record as he piloted the second-generation Bell X-1A to a top speed of Mach 2.44 (1,650 mph) and, just nine months later, Maj. Arthur "Kit" Murray flew the same airplane to a new altitude record of 90,440 feet.

These records stood for less than three years. In September 1956, Capt. Iven Kincheloe became the first man to soar above 100,000 feet, as he piloted the Bell X-2 to a then-remarkable altitude of 126,200 feet. Flying the same airplane just weeks later on Sept. 27, Capt. Mel Apt became the first to exceed Mach 3, accelerating to a speed of Mach 3.2 (2,094 mph). His moment of glory was tragically brief, however. Just seconds after attaining top speed, the X-2 tumbled violently out of control and Apt was never able to recover.

With the loss of the X-2, the search for many of the answers to the riddles of high-Mach flight had to be postponed until the arrival of the most ambitious of the rocket planes — the North American X-15.

Meanwhile, the turbojet revolution had reached a high plateau at Edwards, as aircraft such as the famed "Century Series" of fighters — the F-100 Super Sabre, F-102 Delta Dagger, the Mach 2 F-104 Starfighter, F-105 Thunderchief and F-106 Delta Dart — made supersonic flight seem almost commonplace.

Incorporating many advances made possible by the experimental research programs, each of these aircraft was a technological achievement and, indeed, as a group, they defined the basic speed and altitude envelopes for fighters, which are still in effect to this day.

THE SPACE AGE

It fell to Maj. Robert M. "Bob" White to explore some of the new X-15's remarkable capabilities. He launched from a B-52 mother aircraft on March 7, 1961, and using only 50 percent of the thrust of his XLR99 rocket engine, became the first pilot to exceed Mach 4 (about 3,000 mph). In subsequent flights, Maj. White became the first to break Mach 5 (about 3,750 mph) and 6 (about 4,500 mph) as well. It had taken mankind nine years to get from Mach 1 to Mach 3 (1947-1956); White and the X-15 rocketed past the next three Mach numbers in just eight months.

The 1960s ushered in a new emphasis on space flight. The Test Pilot School, for example, was re-designated the Aerospace Research Pilot School as it moved into the business of training future astronauts.

High above the flightline, the X-15 was beginning to explore hypersonic and exoatmospheric flight. Indeed, in July 1962, it became the first — and, so far, only — airplane to fly in near space as it soared above 314,000 feet, winning astronaut wings for its pilot, Maj. Robert M. White. With Maj. William J. "Pete" Knight at the controls on Oct. 3, 1967, the highly modified X-15A-2 ultimately reached a top speed of Mach 6.72 (4,520 mph), which remains the highest speed ever attained by a manned airplane.

While space-related activities captured the public's imagination, test pilots at Edwards were also continuing to expand the frontiers of atmospheric flight in air-breathing, jet-powered aircraft such as the XB-70 Valkyrie and the YF-12 and SR-71 Blackbird. The 500,000-pound Valkyrie proved itself capable of sustained triple-sonic flight operations at altitudes above 70,000 feet.

In the meantime, the mysterious Blackbirds, now described as first-generation "stealth" aircraft, provided even more dazzling performances as they routinely cruised at speeds in excess of Mach 3 (about 2,250 mph) and at altitudes well above 80,000 feet.

With the decline of the military manned space mission in the early 70s, the Aerospace Research Pilot School was once again re-designated the U.S. Air Force Test Pilot School. This change was more than symbolic. Based on a survey of graduates still active in the flight test business, the school completely revamped its curriculum to reflect major changes that had recently taken place in the aerospace world.

Experience had shown that the proliferation of increasingly sophisticated onboard avionics, sensor and fire-control systems would be a constant and that supervising modern test programs would increasingly require strong management skills. Thus, the school replaced its space-oriented phase of curriculum with a whole new battery of courses focusing on systems tests and test management.

THE MODERN SKIES

New aircraft types arrived in the 1970s: the F-15 Eagle with its advanced engine and fire-control system; the single-engine F-16 Falcon with its revolutionary “fly-by-wire” flight control system; and the B-1 Lancer with its multitude of highly sophisticated offensive and defensive systems.

These planes more than bore out the prophecy concerning the ever-increasing importance of systems testing and integration. Moreover, another major new element of complexity was soon introduced into the flight test process.

At a remote location in 1978 and 1979, an AFFTC test pilot and a pair of flight test engineers were engaged in proof-of-concept testing with Lockheed’s “low-observable” technology demonstrator, dubbed “Have Blue.” The successful conduct of these tests led immediately to the development of a new subsonic attack aircraft that was designated the F-117A Nighthawk.

Another aerospace revolution — the stealth revolution — was underway.

The 1980s opened with one of the most dramatic episodes in all of Edwards’ history.

At 10:20 a.m. on April 14, 1981, the wheels of the Space Shuttle Columbia touched down on Rogers Dry Lakebed. Astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen had successfully landed the first orbiting space vehicle ever to leave the Earth under rocket power and return on the wings of an aircraft. The era of reusable space vehicles had dawned.

In the meantime, flight testing itself had evolved into a remarkably complex process that led to a similar revolution in the Flight Test Center’s ability to acquire and process flight data. In fact, the extraordinary number of costly flying hours required to test and integrate all of the new systems under the traditional “fly-fix-fly” method had forced the AFFTC to rethink its whole approach to the business of testing. Thus, the decade also saw the development of sophisticated new facilities at Edwards that met the challenges of the new technologies.

The Integration Facility for Avionic Systems Test, the Benefield Anechoic Facility and the Test and Evaluation, Modeling and Simulation Facility — all part of the Avionics Test and Integration Complex, permitted the testing and integration of new and complex software-intensive systems on the ground before they were taken into the air.

Spectacular events have become almost commonplace at Edwards over the years, but they have always represented only a small part of the Flight Test Center’s workload. The primary job has always been to assure that American aircrews go into combat with the most effective and reliable operational aircraft in the world.

The capabilities of existing aircraft such as the F-15 and F-16 have been continually refined and expanded, even as totally new aircraft and systems incorporating radical new technologies are developed for future operational use.

The dual-role F-15E, for example, was developed in the 1980s and went on to demonstrate truly remarkable combat effectiveness in the Persian Gulf conflict of the early 90s. The Low Altitude Navigation and Targeting Infrared for Night, or LANTIRN, system revolutionized air-to-ground combat operations during the same conflict by denying our adversary the once comforting sanctuary of night.

The late 1980s also witnessed the arrival of the first giant flying wing to soar over the base in nearly 40 years. The thin silhouette, compound curves and other low-observable characteristics of the B-2 Spirit represented third-generation stealth technology, following the SR-71 and F-117.

The new bomber, by far the most sophisticated and complex airplane ever built, was soon followed in the early 90s by the arrival of the YF-22A and the YF-23A, both of which would soon give a new definition to the term "air superiority."

The two prototype fighters were the first airplanes to blend stealth with agility and high-speed, supersonic cruise capability. The YF-22A was selected to become the Air Force's new advanced tactical fighter after a brief demonstration and validation risk reduction flight test program. Now named the Raptor, the F/A-22 is undergoing evaluation at the AFFTC.

A new group of research projects came to Edwards in the 1990s. Global Hawk, an unmanned aerial vehicle that has been used extensively in Afghanistan as well as Iraq, made its first flight at Edwards in February 1998 and has gone on to fill a critical role in America's war on terrorism. The X-24, X-33, X-34 and X-38, a series of new lifting bodies, technology demonstrators and half scale models that might make space flight, research and development safer and more economical, were tested here by NASA during the decade.

The new millennium brought new projects with worldwide impact. The X-35A and X-32A, competing models for the Joint Strike Fighter program, made their first flights in September and October 2000. The X-35A won the competition in 2001 and will eventually be built in various versions for America's flying armed services and for foreign air forces as well. Also new is the Airborne Laser Program, currently undergoing development and modifications at Edwards.

WHERE WE STAND TODAY

Flight testing at Edwards has come a long way since the first olive-drab XP-59A lifted off from the lakebed more than 60 years ago. Over the years, the U.S. Air Force and the world of aerospace have continued to meet the future in the clear blue skies above the base. Every single aircraft to enter the Air Force's inventory — and a great many that failed to do so — has been put through its paces at Edwards, as well as Navy and Army aircraft.

Arguably, more major milestones in flight have occurred at this base than anywhere else in the world. The demands of the global war against terrorism and the ever-accelerating pace of technological change over the past half-century have been daunting, but the Edwards flight test community repeatedly demonstrates its ability to adapt to these changes and to master the many challenges they impose.

The turbojet revolution, the space revolution, the systems revolution and now the stealth revolution have imposed seemingly insurmountable obstacles. Each barrier, however, has been overcome through a combination of technical skill, daring ingenuity and skillful management.

Indeed, the Air Force Flight Test Center's unique blend of natural, technical and human resources has transformed it into something much more than just a benefit to the Air Force; it is an irreplaceable national asset.

AIR FORCE FLIGHT TEST CENTER

The Air Force Flight Test Center at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., is the Air Force Materiel Command center of excellence for research, development, test and evaluation of aerospace systems for the United States and its allies. It operates the U.S. Air Force Test Pilot School and is home to NASA's Dryden Research Center and considerable test activity conducted by America's commercial aerospace industry.

From the development of the country's first jet aircraft to the Air Force's newest fighter, the F/A-22 Raptor, the test forces at Edwards have played a role in the development of virtually every aircraft to enter the Air Force inventory since World War II. With the center's capability of just-in-time testing, Edwards can provide real-time solutions during combat operations. This combat support establishes the flight test center's direct and tangible link to the warfighter.

Guiding this considerable tasking is the Air Force Flight Test Center headquarters. Led by a one-star general and his command section, flight test center staff agencies include comptroller, contracting, environmental management, history, information technology, inspector general, intelligence, plans, protocol, strategic communications, safety, small-business office and the staff judge advocate office.

The two major organizations supported by the center are the 412th Test Wing and the 95th Air Base Wing, with more than 10,000 service members and government employees.

The 412th Test Wing manages the center's flight operations programs and functions. In doing so, it manages all engineering support for manned and unmanned aerospace vehicle test programs. With many different types of planes operated by the 412th aircrews, the Edwards flightline takes on an almost expeditionary aerospace force look.

The aircraft flown here include the B-1B, B-2, B-52, C-12, C-17, NKC-135, KC-135, CV-22, F-16, F/A-22, F-117, T-38 and T-39. Additionally, the Global Hawk unmanned aerial vehicle and L-23 glider are tested at Edwards. The Airborne Laser 747 test platform is currently undergoing development and modifications for testing, and in 2005, the F-35 Joint Strike Fighter aircraft will be tested here.

The 412th Test Wing also programs, develops, operates and maintains engineering technical services and facilities to support testing, and operates and manages logistic support.

The test wing's support-side counterpart, the 95th Air Base Wing, led by the installation commander, runs Edwards like a small town, delivering a quality of life that makes the base a great place to live and work. The air base wing maintains the security, roads, buildings, transportation and community support services that make the flight test mission possible. It provides the housing, childcare, recreational activities and medical care that affects every person on base. Without the air base wing, the flight test center could not succeed in helping to keep our Air Force the world's finest.

DEVELOPMENTAL TEST AND EVALUATION

Edwards' contribution to the U.S. fighting forces results from test and evaluation — the bedrock of the Air Force Flight Test Center's existence.

The fundamental purpose of test and evaluation, known as T&E, is identifying risks that need to be reduced or eliminated before a system is sent to field bases. Here, the major type of test and evaluation is developmental.

Developmental T&E, known as DT&E, occurs as early as possible in the test and evaluation process and involves close collaboration with the system developer when it's still practical and affordable to change design. It serves as a bridge between system designers and operational users.

Operational test and evaluation, known as OT&E, usually done at other bases, takes a system shaped by DT&E and determines whether it's effective and suitable for its intended task.

The present Air Force test and evaluation philosophy employs combined DT&E and OT&E to increase efficiency and to ensure participation by operational testers prior to major acquisition milestones. The center relies on the combined test force to carry out this mission.

A combined test force, known as CTF, is an integrated product team consisting of three independent groups — a contractor test team, an Air Force developmental test team and an Air Force initial operational test team — working together to meet respective taskings. The purpose of the CTF concept is to minimize duplication and accomplish required test programs while conserving resources.

Besides flight test facilities, the Flight Test Center has an array of ground test facilities. The Avionics Test and Integration Complex, which includes the massive Benefield Anechoic Facility, allows for complete testing of a fully integrated avionics suite in a simulated flight environment, including electronic threats and computer software checkout.

For example, when aircraft systems are tested for integration with other on-board functions, a plane is placed inside the BAF's anechoic chamber — the world's largest electronically secure and quiet environment that realistically simulates an outdoor range. The benefit of this and other modeling and simulation is safer, less expensive testing.

Other aircraft test resources at Edwards range from general support aircraft to extensively modified weapon systems with a full range of instrumentation. Some of the center's flight test engineering capabilities focus on propulsion, human factors, manned and unmanned aerospace vehicles, access to space, weapon delivery and parachute equipment.

LINKED TO GLOBAL ENGAGEMENT

These and other disciplines directly link Edwards to a vision for the 21st century America's Air Force. Global vigilance, reach and power — and its core competencies: developing Airmen, technology-to-warfighting and integrating operations. As the Air Force transforms into an expeditionary aerospace force, the center will march in step with its T&E mission.

How?

- By ensuring weapons systems — needed to control what moves through air and space — perform as advertised
- By ensuring long-range combat platforms can reach beyond friendly borders and can respond effectively in any crisis
- By ensuring airlift and aerial refueling aircraft can move forces and firepower anywhere in the world at any time
- By ensuring fighters and bombers can successfully apply selective force against specific targets
- By ensuring intelligence-gathering planes and unmanned aerial vehicles can deliver powerful knowledge
- By ensuring Edwards' troops are trained thoroughly to join an air expeditionary force deploying to a global hot spot

*Development of rocket propulsion technologies for current and future Air Force space and missile systems is the responsibility of the Air Force Research Laboratory's Propulsion Directorate at Edwards.

The Air Force Research Laboratory, headquartered at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, encompasses all Air Force research and development with directorates and facilities throughout the United States.

The directorate here has devoted its efforts to the discovery, development and application of scientific and engineering answers to national defense rocket propulsion needs for more than 50 years.

More than 250 scientists, engineers, technicians and support staff advance this technology area. They are assisted by additional on-site contractors and base support organizations.

The propulsion directorate is the development center for all Air Force rocket and missile propulsion technologies including propellants, combustion, characterization of exhaust plumes, and the materials and structures unique to rocket propulsion. Nearly every U.S. rocket-propelled system used today for tactical operations, ballistic launch, space launch and space operations can trace its technology back to this facility.

The directorate's unique state-of-the-art research equipment and physical assets cover more than 65 square miles of Edwards. They include static rocket test stands capable of holding test firings up to 10 million pounds of thrust.

Known historically as the 'Rocket Site,' its current efforts are devoted to a national master plan for rocket propulsion technology research involving all military services, NASA and the rocket industry. Called IHPRT, or Integrated High Payoff Rocket Propulsion Technology, this research, coupled with advanced propulsion concept demonstrations will push the advancement of rocket propulsion technology into the new century.

*The Dryden Flight Research Center is NASA's primary installation for aerospace flight research and is NASA's Center of Excellence for atmospheric flight operations. The center's charter is to research, develop, verify and transfer advanced aeronautics, space and related technologies to industry and other government agencies. The center also supports the Space Shuttle program as an alternate landing site.

Dryden's history dates back to late 1946, when 12 employees arrived at what is now Edwards from the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics Langley Memorial Aeronautical Laboratory, Hampton, Va. Their goal was to prepare for X-1 supersonic research flights in a joint NACA-Army Air Forces-Bell Aircraft program. The NACA was NASA's predecessor.

Since the days of the X-1, the first aircraft to fly faster than the speed of sound, the center has grown in size and significance and is associated with many important milestones in aviation research: supersonic and hypersonic flight, wingless lifting bodies, fly-by-wire, supercritical and forward-swept wings and space shuttles.

Dryden continues to pioneer programs that support NASA's Aeronautics Research Mission, contributing to revolutionary leaps in technology by reducing the cost of access to space and improving global civil aviation.

The Airborne Science Program supports the requirements of NASA's Office of Science. Dryden maintains and operates two ER-2s and a DC-8. The aircraft collect data for many experiments in support of projects serving the world scientific community.

Dryden has been the site of 49 space shuttle landings since the first orbital flight in April 1981. After an Edwards' landing, space shuttles are serviced at Dryden for ferry flights back to Kennedy Space Center in Florida atop one of NASA's two modified Boeing 747 Shuttle Carrier Aircraft.

Kennedy is the primary landing site for all shuttle missions, but Dryden remains an alternate landing site for future missions when inclement weather affects Florida or in the event of an emergency.

Along with research and support aircraft, Dryden assets include simulation laboratories; a high-temperature and loads-calibration laboratory; aircraft flight-instrumentation capability; a flow-visualization facility to study air flow patterns; a data-analysis facility to process flight research data; and remotely piloted vehicle flight research expertise.

In addition, Dryden's Research Aircraft Integration Facility simultaneously checks aircraft flight controls, avionics, electronics and other systems. This facility is the only one of its type in NASA and is designed to speed up and enhance systems integration and preflight checks on research aircraft.

From a handful of engineers who established the center in the late 1940s, Dryden now employs approximately 1,300 civilian and contract workers.

COMMUTING

*The two primary commuting routes to Edwards' main base are California State Highway 14, also known as the Antelope Valley Freeway, for people living in Lancaster, Palmdale and other cities and towns to the south, and California State Highway 58 for people living north or east of Edwards. Highway 58 is the main route to reach the Air Force Research Lab. Speed limits along these roads are in the 65- to 70-mph range, making it practical to live relatively far from base. TRANSPORTATION

*There are three major commercial airports within 100 miles of Edwards. Los Angeles International, located in Inglewood off Interstate 405, one hour and 45 minutes south of Edwards (about 90 miles), is one of the world's busiest airports and traffic congestion in the vicinity is often a factor to consider.

The Bob Hope Airport, located in Burbank, is an hour-and-a-half (about 90 miles) straight shot south from the base along State Highway 14 and Interstate 5.

Ontario International Airport, located about two hours south (about 110 miles) in San Bernardino County off Interstate 15, is a less congested means of connecting to air travel. Newcomers arriving by air, rail or bus should ask for assistance from their sponsor. Late-night arrival by commercial means is not advised.

WEATHER

*Sun and wind, not heat, are the primary year-round characteristics of Edwards' weather. Skies above Edwards are sunny more than 350 days per year. Winds usually pick up in the afternoon from the southwest to the west and can become strong at times, particularly in the spring. Edwards' clear skies, desert climate and 2,300-foot elevation result in a 30 to 40-degree difference between daytime and nighttime temperatures. Mild evening temperatures and low humidity make the hot summer months surprisingly comfortable. Precipitation is rare between April and October and only accumulates approximately five inches per year. Snow flurries occasionally fall, but rarely stick to the ground. The chart below shows average temperatures and precipitation.

NATURAL DISASTER PREPAREDNESS

Civil Engineer Readiness Unit

225 Rosamond Blvd.

(661) 277-4433

Earthquakes are the primary type of natural disaster most likely to occur at Edwards. Despite being located between the first and third largest fault lines in California, the San Andreas and the Garlock respectively, the base has no historical record of ever sustaining damage due to an earthquake. Occasionally during the spring rainy season, the base may be subject to flash flooding. Both earthquakes and flash flooding give little or no warning and can compromise the well-being of the community, the ability to operate and even the structural integrity of homes and buildings. Strong winds are also common and have been known to cause local damage.

The Civil Engineer Readiness Unit suggests the following steps be taken to prepare for a major earthquake:

Develop a family plan

- Decide where your family can reunite if separated.
- Be familiar with the safe spots in each room so that you can seek protection under sturdy tables and desks or against walls. Avoid danger spots such as near windows, mirrors, hanging objects and tall, unsecured furniture.
- Know where the gas, water and electricity turnoff sites are and how to shut them off.
- Secure water heaters and appliances.
- Maintain a three-day emergency food and water supply. Create a survival kit, including a flashlight, portable battery-operated radio, extra batteries, prescription medicine, first-aid supplies, clothing and sanitation needs. A small kit should also be placed in each vehicle.
- Keep current on first aid and cardiopulmonary resuscitation skills.

After the earthquake

- Check yourself and those around you for injuries. Don't move seriously injured persons unless they are in immediate danger.
- Check utility leaks and broken electrical and sewage lines. Survey your house for cracks and signs of damage.
- Check water and food supplies. Remember emergency water can be found in water heaters, melted ice cubes, the toilet tank and canned vegetables.
- Use a portable radio for instructions and news reports.
- Do not drive your car unless necessary. Roads need to be clear for emergency vehicles. The secret to success in surviving a natural disaster is the ability to plan. The Civil Engineering Readiness Unit provides earthquake information to the base populace upon request.

SONIC BOOMS

* A distinguishing characteristic of Edwards is the large “booms” first heard here in 1947. Those booms are known as sonic booms. A sonic boom sounds similar to thunder and is caused by an object moving faster than sound; about 750 mph at sea level. An aircraft traveling through the atmosphere continuously produces air pressure waves similar to the water waves produced by a ship’s bow. When an aircraft exceeds the speed of sound, these pressure waves combine and form shock waves, which travel forward from the generation or “release” point.

As an aircraft flies at supersonic speeds, it is continually generating shock waves, dropping sonic booms along its flight path, similar to someone dropping objects from a moving vehicle. The sound heard on the ground as a sonic boom is the sudden onset and release of pressure after the build-up by the shock wave or “peak overpressure.” Duration of a sonic boom is brief and is less than a second — 100 milliseconds—for most fighter-sized aircraft.

ORIGIN AND HISTORY

At some time in the unrecorded past, thousands of years ago, an area of some 2,400 square miles was dropped or depressed about 100 feet below the surface of a vast coastal plain. When underground movement jarred the plain upward, the sunken area rose and became what is now known as the Antelope Valley.

The Paiute Indians were the first known human inhabitants of the area. The first white visitors were most likely Spanish navy deserters, members of the Portola party traveling in the valley's vicinity in 1769. In pursuing these deserters, Lt. Pedro Fages, one of Spain's Catalonia volunteers, reached the southern end of the Antelope Valley in 1772. His diarist reports that Indians were seen lurking behind what were thought to be date palms, but were actually Joshua trees.

The year 1776 brought Father Francisco Garces and three Indian guides from the San Gabriel Mission. Garces recorded his views of the vast land that was then called El Tehon Rancheria, or the Badger Ranch, of the Cuabajoy Indians. In 1834, Kit Carson and Gen. John C. Fremont came through the valley and remained long enough to establish what is today known as Fort Tejon Road. Wildlife was so plentiful at that time that it was said three geese were killed with one shot at Lake Elizabeth. Grass and desert growth was luxuriant and pools of water stood in many places over the valley floor.

The first determined settlers chose the Lake Elizabeth region and the foothill of the Tehachapi Mountains. The general area became known as the Antelope Valley because of the immense herds of these animals. Yet, hunters and severe winters in the late 1800s decimated the herds.

The Southern Pacific Railroad, between San Francisco and Los Angeles, was completed in 1876 with the rails from Los Angeles having been placed as far inland as Soledad Canyon to the south of the valley. The frantic race between the two large opposing work forces ended with the ceremonial driving of the golden spike to join the rails and heralded the opening of the Antelope Valley to the outside world.

By 1890, the Antelope Valley was in a very prosperous condition, especially in the southern portion of Lancaster and Palmdale. Land seekers and settlers had come in large numbers. Many families with financial means settled in the eastern segment of the valley to begin raising grain and fruits and related agricultural products.

The year 1898 was a year of "firsts" for the valley. The previous year borax had been discovered in the United States, and in 1898 it was found that an immense deposit of borax lay beneath the desert landscape of the Antelope Valley. Within the same 12 months, gold was discovered in Rosamond. Men working the mines made their way across what was known then as Rodriguez Dry Lakebed, to and from work, on a V-shaped wagon rigged with sails.

The age of aviation came to the Antelope Valley in the 1930s when the Army Air Corps began training operations on the shores of the dry lakebed at the Muroc Bombing and Gunnery Range, now Edwards Air Force Base. During World War II, the dry lakebed "floated" a huge wooden battleship - the Muroc Maru - constructed to train bombardiers in the use of bombsites. Runways now bisect the lakebed.

Today the Antelope Valley has learned to successfully blend the traditional pursuits of business, commerce, industry, agriculture and mining with the technology of the aerospace frontier, while remaining a place where people prefer to live and visitors return time and time again. This high desert area is known for its contributions to the defense of the nation with its close proximity to existing Department of Defense facilities, including Edwards, Air Force Plant 42 and China Lake Naval Weapons Center.

VALLEY LOCATION

The Antelope Valley, one of many valleys in the Mojave Desert, is bordered by the San Gabriel Mountains to the south, the Tehachapi Mountains to the west, the greater Mojave Desert to the north and Victor Valley to the east. Rosamond, Mojave, California City, Boron and the greater part of Edwards lie in Kern County in the northern part of the valley. Lancaster, Palmdale, Quartz Hill, Littlerock and the southern most sliver of Edwards lie in Los Angeles County in the southern and central part of the valley. The eastern part of the valley falls within San Bernardino County.

The town is also home of the Col. Vernon P. Saxon Jr. Aerospace Museum.

The town's people tuck themselves into the preservation of the rich history of both Boron and Edwards. Kern County provides the community's branch library, fire station and sheriff department. The U.S. Post Office is centrally located on Boron Avenue.

★Los Angeles is California's largest city, both in population and in territory nearly 470 square miles, roughly the same size as Edwards AFB. The city ranks second in city and metropolitan area population in the United States. Los Angeles is a collection of intermingling communities, each with its own identity and character. The area thrives on tourism, world trade and highly diversified industries predominantly oil, electronics, finance, entertainment, real estate, aircraft and aerospace.

Even with 3.7 million residents, Los Angeles is hardly a city in the traditional sense; it lacks a concentrated urban center and rather sprawls on in every direction, from sea and shore to the Hollywood hills. A dense network of interstates grid the basin and support the flux of traffic from dawn 'til dusk.

Communities have developed around most of the missions, but each – in its individual way – continues to perpetuate the flavor of the Spanish era. CARING FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

Supporting the Edwards Air Force Base mission through sound environmental stewardship

At Edwards, the mission and the natural environment go hand in hand. The unique physical environment makes the high desert an ideal place for flight test. Helping the flight testers and other units on base maintain access to the air, land and water for flight test, operations, research and other activities, while protecting the delicate balance of the desert ecosystem, is the mission of Environmental Management.

To effectively accomplish its mission, Environmental Management adopted a four-pillar approach. Appropriate personnel are consulted during the planning and implementation stages of all test programs and construction projects at Edwards.

The four pillars:

Cleanup: The identification, investigation, management and cleanup of hazardous waste sites aim to protect human health and the environment.

Conservation: Environmental assessments are provided for test programs and construction projects to survey potential impact. Efforts to manage the protection and preservation of natural resources and cultural and historic sites at Edwards also fall within the conservation pillar.

Pollution prevention: Processes are developed to minimize the use of hazardous materials, the generation of hazardous waste and the deposition of solid waste in a landfill. Pillar efforts emphasize reusing and recycling programs.

Compliance: Air quality, water quality, hazardous waste, aboveground and underground storage tanks and special programs concerning issues such as asbestos and lead-based paint are monitored, measured and carefully managed. Compliance personnel help base organizations select, design and install low-emission equipment; they also help them apply for and maintain permits. The goal of compliance is to meet and satisfy all applicable environmental laws, rules and regulations.

Rogers (background) and Rosamond dry lakebeds are two unique natural resources that help make Edwards the premiere flight test facility. The lakebeds are among the lowest points in the Antelope Valley and collect seasonal rain and snow runoff from surrounding hills and also from the San Gabriel Mountains to the south and the Tehachapi Mountains to the west.

Base environmental personnel dedicated to all four pillars actively work with regulatory agencies and the community in a spirit of cooperation and commitment to ensure the Air Force Flight Test Center and all associate units on base accomplish the mission while respecting the environment.

For all who conduct business on the base – from Air Force flight testing to Marine helicopter operations to NASA's aerospace research to rocket science applications – Environmental Management provides assistance with project planning to ensure compliance with environmental law, reduce hazardous waste generation and ensure proper disposal of pollutants. By working together and doing the job right every day, Edwards will continue to comply with environmental regulations, preserve the natural environment and accomplish the Air Force Flight Test Center's mission.
